Office of Teacher Recruitment and Quality Division of Human Resources

"Three years ago we decided to invest in inclusive hiring. We learned to be as unbiased as possible and ended up choosing an incredible teacher, still with us, who we would never have found without this process. At this point, the impact on our students has been profound. Students have more teachers they connect with—from race and gender to life experiences."

-NYC DOE Principal

Introduction

Great schools begin with great hires. The people in our buildings are the very definition of the community we create, and the choices we make during the hiring process—from recruiting the right candidates, to identifying the best fit, to sustaining that fit once selected—offer the single most powerful opportunity we have as leaders to shape our schools.

Unfortunately there is no single answer to what makes a potential hire a "fit" for your school. Great educators come in impossibly varied guises, with impossibly varied backgrounds. But what a new generation of research makes clear is that in a culturally diverse world, hiring a culturally diverse staff is a fundamental need, standing alongside strong curriculum, high expectations, and a deep sense of belonging as an imperative job of a principal. Diversity (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.) is not a bonus, nor an afterthought, nor a performative gesture toward an ideal world, but instead is a crucial, often-overlooked lever you must engage to build a strong school community. Eighty-five percent of New York City students are students of color. Students taught by teachers who look like them, who share similar identities, benefit in profound ways. They are less likely to drop out of high school, more likely to aspire to college, and more likely to graduate on track. Similarly, educators who look like their students are more likely to stay with their school, leading to a teaching force with greater tenure and expertise. To be direct, if you are not actively seeking to hire inclusively you are not building the strongest community possible—and the students you serve are missing out.

But just like hiring in general, inclusive hiring is not easy. It won't happen by accident. This toolkit presents a series of practices designed to rejuvenate your hiring process. It was designed by principals and teachers for principals and teachers, combining research on bias, expertise from HR professionals, with systems used by some of the city's most expert educators. We believe it will allow you to actively seek out the best candidates to meet the needs of New York City's magnificent array of students.

This guide offers:

- ☐ Tools to outline and standardize the recruitment process
- Best practices to support inclusivity and promote a school culture of belonging
- □ Differentiated hiring process timelines to be modified for your school context
- □ Strategies to mitigate bias throughout the interview and selection process
- □ Resources for further learning

Before implementing Stages 1-6 of the recruitment and hiring process, we recommend taking the Inclusive Teacher Recruitment & Hiring Self-Assessment to identify focus areas to guide your engagement with the resources. After completing the assessment individually, principals can share the tool with hiring committee members.

Assemble a Diverse Hiring Committee

Tips to Mitigate Bias

DO: Consider and uplift the perspectives of students, parents and guardians, and staff members in the department gaining new hires.

AVOID: Creating a hiring committee of "likeminded" or otherwise similar individuals (e.g., all administrators).

What is the purpose of this stage?

Assemble a hiring team that will represent diverse perspectives and form the bedrock of the inclusive hiring process in your building

When should it be used?

Before recruiting and interviewing candidates

Who should be involved at this stage?

Principal, Assistant Principal(s)

Starting point

Inclusive Teacher Recruitment & Hiring Self-Assessment

Hiring for diversity (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.) is the work of a team, not an individual. While a strong leader can hold a vision for their building, even the most determined does not contain the multiple perspectives, experiences, and forms of expertise that define their community. Your hiring committee will be the leading face of your school for outreach, directly representing your school to prospective candidates as you recruit and interview them. At the same time, because their decisions will impact the entire school community, committee members will take an inevitable role in selling those decisions to others. It is therefore critical to assemble your hiring committee with care: finding members who understand your community and are committed to an inclusive search that will find the best candidate.

In this stage you will build:

- □ A diverse hiring committee that includes stakeholders from across your community
- □ A shared vision of success, ensuring all members understand the value of a diverse staff
- □ Roles and responsibilities for members of the committee to carry out the hiring process

Use Active Outreach to Build a Committee with the Best Members

Your hiring committee need not be large or difficult to manage. We recommend small teams with 3–6 members. Team members do need, however, the skills necessary to work collaboratively and hear the underrepresented voices of staff in their schools. Use the guiding questions below to consider the interest levels, mindsets, and workloads of prospective members, then actively go after the "dream team" that will best fill your committee.

Do I know who is interested?

- Have I shared the opportunity to participate in the hiring committee with my staff?
- Have I provided opportunities for other stakeholders to express their interest in participating?
- If I identified potential committee members, did I speak with them to confirm their interest and enthusiasm for participating?

Am I considering my team's mindsets?

- How would members of my hiring committee explain why diversity (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.) matters for our students?"
- What am I doing to assess my team's mindsets? How would I know if the members of my hiring committee understand their social identities (e.g., their race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.) and how their identities contribute to our community?

Mindset Work Begins at Home

As you consider your team's mindset, make sure you are also examining your own. Use the Inclusive Teacher Recruitment & Hiring Self-Assessment to evaluate your readiness to engage in this work, as well as locate additional resources that will help build a stronger, more inclusive culture in your building.

"By including students, we are gaining insight on their needs as learners who are taking accountability for their experiences in the classroom."

--- Member of a NYC Hiring Committee

How can I ensure diverse representation?

- Do the members of my hiring committee represent different identities, backgrounds, and skill-sets?
- Am I actively trying to recruit teachers from diverse backgrounds so that our teaching staff better reflects our student population? Is someone from the same background on my hiring committee?
- Does my hiring committee include teachers?
 - Of different grades / subjects?
 - In grades / subjects with anticipated vacancies?
- Does my hiring committee include other stakeholders, such as students, families, school staff, and members of community-based organizations?
- How would the members of my hiring committee explain the goals of our community to an outsider? Would they be in alignment?
- Does the hiring committee have the appropriate subject matter experts available to assess quality, skill, and potential during the interviewing process? If not, how can I get that?

Does my team have influence?

- How do I know if the members of my hiring committee have influence in the broader school community?
- If we adopt new practices, will my committee be able to help build buy-in and enthusiasm?
- Can the members of my hiring committee advocate for underrepresented groups?

Do the people on my team have the bandwidth to do the work?

- Do the members of my hiring committee have the time to take on this work?
- Have I repeatedly asked the same staff members to take on extra responsibilities? Could my own bias be informing who I usually "go to"?
- Are there responsibilities I can shift, or duties I can lighten to allow a high leverage community member to participate? Can per session funds be allocated to support this work?
- Have I cleared a set time when hiring committee members can engage in their work together?
- If I determine that my teaching staff is struggling with bandwidth, how can I add in voices from the community—such as parents, caregivers, and students—who do have the time to join?
- Have I considered using tools like video recordings of interviews and demo lessons to let committee members weigh in asynchronously?

Fact

A Black male student who has at least one Black teacher in 3rd, 4th or 5th grade is significantly less likely to drop out of high school and significantly more likely to aspire to attend a four-year college or university (Gershenson et al, 2017).¹

 Seth Gershenson, Cassandra Hart, Constance Lindsay, and Nicholas Papageorge, "The Long-Run Impacts of Same-Race Teachers," IZA discussion paper 10630, 2017.

Create a Common Understanding of Success

Creating a shared knowledge base and vision is a foundational step for collaboration that should come before any recruitment or hiring activities. Take time to build background in the "whys" and "hows" of inclusive hiring. Begin by making a list of the training and resources that have been most helpful for your own personal development as a practitioner of inclusive hiring. Consider using this powerful explainer, Fact Sheet: Diverse Teaching Matters, to root your team in the urgency of this work. Finally take a moment to assess the readiness of your team to do this work using the following questions:

Are we all on the same page in terms of a vision of inclusive hiring?

- Do hiring committee members understand the value of creating inclusive hiring and recruiting practices?
- Do they have a shared sense of purpose related to that understanding?
- Are they prepared to engage in a collaborative process and protocol creation (e.g., creation of job descriptions, interview questions, etc.)

Do we need any additional professional development to support our work?

- Have hiring committee members participated in implicit bias training?
- Have hiring committee members engaged in any professional development related to designing and implementing inclusive hiring processes?
- Are hiring committee members grounded in the basic legal considerations of hiring? (E.g., do they know it is illegal to ask about marital status, or raise concerns about a pregnancy during a debrief?)

Once you have created your list of training and resources, connect the items on the list with the names of team members who might benefit from them. Then highlight the 1-3 most important resources for the whole team, and plan how you will ensure your team accesses them.

Clearly Define Roles, Responsibilities, and Process

Teams succeed or fail based on the ability to work together. Take a moment to define the roles on your hiring committee and outline the routines that will define those roles. It is important to consider all stakeholders in the recruitment and hiring process, and decide who on the team will be responsible for what. As the leader of your team, you can support their work by establishing and managing meeting times, delegating tasks, and allocating resources. Below is a list of guiding questions to support both the learning and logistic needs of your team:

Are we clear on who will be making decisions?

- Start by defining decision-making authority and explaining how hiring decisions will ultimately be made.
 - How will decisions be made throughout the process? (e.g., by consensus, by recommendation to an approver, by the school leader after considering all input)?
 - Who makes the final hiring decision? If there is a final approver, who is that person? When and how will they be included in the process? Are there decisions that can be made without their participation? If so, how are those defined?

Does everyone know their roles and responsibilities?

- Have you clearly identified and assigned all roles and responsibilities associated with this work?
 - Who will set meetings and create agendas?
 - Who will be responsible for drafting key documents (e.g., timelines, recruiting materials, job descriptions, resume review protocols, interview questions and rubrics, emails to candidates, etc.)?
 - Who will represent your school at hiring fairs?
 - Who will review resumes? And/or conduct interviews with candidates?
 - Who will be the primary point of contact for candidates and keep them engaged?

	Actions	When?	Who?
Identify Members	 Share the opportunity to participate in the hiring committee with your staff, as well as your vision for the inclusive community that will result from continued effort in this work. Announce at all-staff meeting. Send details in a clear email with deadline for expressing interest and link to survey. Reinforce announcement in department meetings. Send reminder email two days prior to deadline. Review potential committee members and seek input from your assistant principal(s). Consider the perspectives and stakeholder groups represented in your committee. If you are actively trying to recruit teachers so that our teaching staff better reflects our student population, ensure the hiring committee includes people of that background on it. Identify potential members and speak with them to confirm their interest and enthusiasm for participating. Communicate estimated time per week needed for hiring committee meetings and independent work. Confirm this aligns with potential member's current workload. Consider leveraging the Peer Recruiter program to support your overall hiring process.
Create a Shared Vision	 Invite confirmed hiring committee members to a welcome meeting and ask them to take the Self-Paced Module for Inclusive Teacher Recruitment & Hiring. Outline the purpose of the committee and share key takeaways from the self-paced module to begin grounding your team in the "why." Share how you hope revising hiring practices will impact your students, staff, and school. Draft a vision statement with your team to guide your work.

	Actions	When?	Who?
Define Roles	 Identify owners and support persons for the following roles: Main candidate contact-person, Interview Calendar owner, Drafter(s) of candidate communication, Drafter(s) of onboarding materials and event plans.
Assign Professional Development Opportunities	 Invite committee members to take an IAT (Implicit Association Test) to build awareness around their own implicit biases. Reflect on your learnings from the Self-Paced Module and share important takeaways with your team. Identify time for committee members to complete the Self-Paced Module for their knowledge building and assign as appropriate. Identify NYCDOE PDs to support inclusive hiring and assign as appropriate.
Determine Work Processes	 Plan recruitment steps: a. Identify hiring events. Plan interview steps: a. Resume collection, b. Number and format of interviews, c. Evaluation protocol. Identify who will make final decision for hires.

STAGE 2 |

Examine your Current Practices & Environment

Students taught by teachers who look like them, who share similar cultural identities, benefit in profound ways. They are less likely to drop out of high school, more likely to aspire to college, and more likely to graduate on track (Learning Policy Institute, 2018).

What is the purpose of this stage?

When should it be used?

Before recruiting and interviewing candidates.

Who should be involved at this stage?

Hiring Committee, Principal, Assistant Principal(s)

Starting point

Inclusive Teacher Recruitment & Hiring Self-Assessment

If you have not thought about the environment you are hiring people into—where your community fosters inclusivity and belonging, and where it fails to live up to your ideals—you will almost certainly hit roadblocks as you confront your limitations. More challengingly, without taking a hard look at your current practices, you are at risk of falling backward and lowering morale when these limitations result in lower retention of underrepresented groups. We believe this analysis will be most effective if done collaboratively with your hiring committee, and that if done in the spirit of honest introspection, it will pay dividends at every step of the process.

In this stage you will:

- Examine how unconscious bias has shown up in past hiring processes
- □ Reflect on where it may currently still impact your process
- ☐ Identify practices to help you reflect and create an affirming experience for all staff and candidates

Examining Types of Biases

Bias can show up in the hiring process without those responsible for hiring realizing it. It is thus important to deliberately design hiring processes and practices that actively mitigate it. This will not only promote inclusivity but also help to identify candidates who are truly the best match for your school. Consider the following definitions of common forms of unconscious bias as you reflect on current hiring practices:

Affinity Bias: The propensity to like and be drawn to people who share similar traits, backgrounds, interests (e.g., race, gender, sexual orientation, hometown, educational background, love of sports, etc.). ("I felt comfortable around Mark the minute he told me he had served in the Peace Corps too.")

Confirmation Bias: The tendency to make conclusions about someone based on pre-existing beliefs about them, drawn from personal beliefs or prejudices, then focusing on information that matches that belief. ("I thought Michelle might be a little prim based on her blouse. And did you see her snooty answer to our first question?")

Halo Effect: Making generalized conclusions about someone based on hearing something impressive about them; conversely, drawing negative conclusions about someone based on a single data point, which may be insignificant or inaccurate. ("Wow, Ray speaks fluent Spanish and Italian? I bet that guy is some sort of genius.")

Conformity Bias: Saying or doing something that goes against your own judgment in order to conform with the group. People may be especially likely to conform to the opinion of someone in a higher position of power. ("Just like everyone else said before me, I have no reservations and think James Smith will be an excellent addition to our staff.")

"As a Latina woman, I did not have any Latino teachers or administrators and in many ways felt like an outcast. Now having a Black principal and assistant principal in my school community, I see our students feel empowered. It is such a beautiful thing."

Fact

Students of all races report positive perceptions of educators of color. Students of color reported being more motivated by teachers of color, while white students felt academically challenged and cared for (Learning Policy Institute, 2018).

Bias and the Hiring Process

There are many ways bias can show up in recruitment and hiring. The resources in this toolkit are designed to mitigate bias at every stage, providing best practices and actionable templates to promote inclusive processes. For more extensive information about unconscious bias, see the Unconscious Bias & Hiring guidance sheet.

Examining Your School Environment

These questions support an analysis of your school environment. Consider the following as they apply to your school or team:

- Conflicts Are there instances, both minor and severe, where prejudices or hostile remarks have impacted the work environment or certain individuals?
- Complaints Do workplace related complaints involve issues of discriminatory behavior?
- Turnover rates Are they higher for staff from underrepresented backgrounds? Do they shift between departments or span the entire staff?
- Low morale Are there indicators of hostility among teachers and staff? Are there programs implemented by administration that discriminate or do not foster inclusion of members of the school community as a whole?
- Non-Inclusive policies Are there policies or practices within your school that create barriers or (would) disproportionately impact underrepresented staff members (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.)?

Examining Past Hiring Practices

It is also important to analyze the policies, practices, values and culture in your school. Consider the following:

- Objectivity Have hiring practices and decisions been grounded in tradition, or are they grounded in objective criteria? Do you have any tools like rubrics or interview questions from previous hires you can refer to that are grounded in objectivity?
- ▶ Teacher voice Have you listened to feedback from current teachers about their experience with your school as they were being hired? Can you identify growth points?
- Outreach barriers Have there been barriers in the recruitment process that prevented the building of a diverse (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.) candidate pool?
- Replicable successes If there was a diverse (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.) candidate pool for this role previously, can you identify and replicate relevant steps taken during the recruitment process to achieve similar results?
- Traditions and Preferences What were the qualities and backgrounds of your previous hires? Did they have things in common? Were the qualities and backgrounds they brought required for the role, or were they unrelated to the position? Do any align with leadership preference and/or school tradition to indicate an unconscious bias?

STAGE 3 | Map Your Recruitment &

Hiring Process

What is the purpose of this stage?

Create a timeline with projected checkpoints and stages to guide your hiring process

When should it be used?

- Pre-budget release
- After the hiring committee is assembled
- Before recruiting and interviewing candidates

Who should be involved at this stage?

Hiring Committee, Principal, Assistant Principal(s)

All about balance

The longer these stages take, the fewer qualified candidates remain in the pool. This is known as "talent pool decay," and it means that a lengthy recruitment process tends to negatively impact the number of candidates from diverse (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.) communities. A good starting point for developing your timeline is to try and balance your need for professional development and the bandwidth of your staff alongside the push to move things quickly.

Investing time to map your recruitment process will smooth every step to come. A clear timeline allows you to foresee potential obstacles and allocate staff time. At the same time, by outlining expectations at every stage, you will provide candidates with a thoughtful, streamlined experience that avoids missteps in communication. At the end of this section there are two sample timelines for a 3- and 9-month process. They are a resource to springboard your planning ideas, not prescriptive suggestions and we invite you to customize the steps to your needs!

In this stage you will:

- Create a roadmap of the entire recruitment and hiring process by calendarizing tasks
- ☐ Identify which committee member will complete each task

Create your Process Map and Timeline Steps

When outlining your process map, dedicate a meeting with your hiring committee to weigh their perspectives in your decisions. Be responsive to committee members' schedules and workloads to create a map that reflects your actual capacity rather than an ideal. This type of communication will also create buy-in and authentic commitment to action from each member.

How to Use These Examples

Each timeline below represents a possible school context. After sharing the following examples with your team and choosing the timeline that feels aligned to your needs, customize the process map as you plan your school-specific protocol. You should feel empowered to modify each timeline to meet the capacity of your team and add tasks to support their workflow. When identifying a process that supports your needs, consider how DOE-wide structures may impact your practices. For example, everything before Stage 4 can be reasonably implemented before budgets are released.

Tips to Mitigate Bias

DO: When analyzing a job description, ask yourself: "Does this reflect the actual requirements of the position? Or does it reflect traditions and preferences?"

AVOID: Be aware of focusing on candidates similar to you (e.g., have familiar names, went to a similar college, are a similar age).

What is the purpose of this stage?

Learn about the structured interview process and make a plan for carrying it out with your team.

When should it be used?

Structured Interviewing Guide

The hiring practice known as Structured Interviewing is designed to actively mitigate bias. Structured interviewing means exposing candidates to the same experiences—including the same process-steps, interview questions, and methods of scoring—as they compete for the same job. This provides all candidates with a uniform experience that mitigates bias and pushes interviewers to only assess candidates against job-aligned criteria.

In this stage you will:

- □ Review and revise the job description for anticipated vacancies
- ☐ Create a rubric, aligned with key skills, to evaluate candidate responses

Conduct interviews

This section is designed primarily as a planning stage. The following section, Stage 5: Begin Hiring: Sourcing, Reviewing, and Interviewing Candidates will give more support on actually carrying out this work.

Note: All these steps are supported with additional tips, advice, and resources in the Structured Interviewing Guide.

Step 1: Review job description to gain clarity on the specific needs for the role.

Structured interviewing begins by developing a shared understanding of what past experiences, skills, and competencies a strong candidate will have. Before looking at any existing job descriptions, task the hiring committee to write out the requirements needed to be successful in the role. It will be especially valuable to hear the perspectives of teachers who have lived experience in the position and community members whose children have been or will be in the grade and subject.

Next, use the guiding questions below to evaluate previous job descriptions for positions similar to the vacancy for which you are hiring.

Education and Experience Requirements

- Based on the position, what are the minimum education requirements, experience, and certification requirements required by law?
- Consider referencing the NYS Certification Search if you are unclear on the legal standards for the position you are hiring for.

Sample List of Requirements:

Required Skills

- □ Ability to plan and implement lessons for grades 7-8 mathematics curriculum
- □ Knowledge of student engagement strategies for synchronous and asynchronous instruction

Desired Skills

 Demonstrated commitment to culturally responsive pedagogy and prior experience with implementation

The Research on Wants vs. Needs

Make a clear distinction between desired skills vs. required skills and limit these sections as much as possible. Research from Linkedin shows that the amount of job duties could impact the diversity in your hiring pool, as underrepresented candidates are more likely to think they are underqualified.

Highlight the Importance of Diversity

- Does this position description include language explaining the importance of being able to successfully work with diverse populations? If not, feel free to use this sample language:
 - The New York City Department of Education is dedicated to building a teaching staff that can best serve our diverse student body (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.). Successful candidates will demonstrate the ability to work with the diverse communities and cultures that define our city.

"A diverse staff affects more than just student education. It also helps to build communication bridges with families and fosters trust in the school-home connection."

- NYC DOE Principal

Determine what materials you will require candidates to submit.

While a resume, cover letter, references, and interview form the core of most hiring processes, many principals find performance tasks invaluable. These performance tasks can range from a request for sample materials, such as lesson plans, assessments, or unit progressions, to an invitation to demo a lesson in-person. Consider what additional input you want from your candidates, and then build these requirements into the job description.

As with everything detailed in this stage, the process for evaluating these new requests must be standardized. While this section focuses on creating a standard interview, it is critical to remember that the standardized processes must extend to all aspects of the candidate's experience, including these additional materials. If you are expecting a demo lesson, then the procedure for delivering that lesson, and the hiring committee's assessment of their performance must be standardized in the same manner outlined below for the interview.

Fact

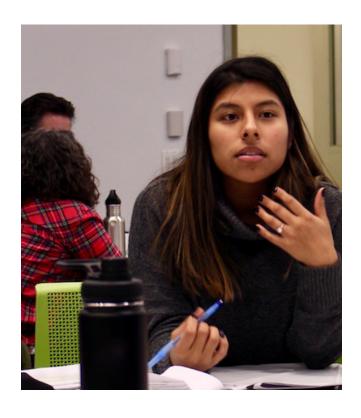

Teachers of color play pivotal roles in building relationships that help students of color and their families make connections to school (King, 1993).¹

 Sabrina Hope King, "The Limited Presence of African-American Teachers," The Review of Educational Research 63, no. 2 (1993): 115-149.

Revising the Job Description

With your newly identified list of required and desired skills, knowledge sets, and competencies, you are ready to craft a job description that will draw a qualified and diverse (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.) candidate pool. Incorporate these skills into the body of the description, then revise language and tone. Follow these guidelines for inclusive, accessible, and affirming language:

- Use gender neutral pronouns if pronouns are needed in the job description.
 - Example: use "they" and not "she/he" or "she or he"
- Ensure that preferred job requirements map to the responsibilities of the position. Remember that many positions' educational and experience requirements are dictated by entities outside of the NYC DOE and are aligned with the responsibilities of the job.
- Include language regarding your school's commitment to diversity in the workplace and working with diverse communities in the position requirements.
 - Note: this is separate from the EEO statement on discrimination.
- Limit the use of jargon inside of your job description. Heavy jargon use can limit the number of applicants to the role, which could limit the diversity in your hiring pool.

Tip

Research has shown that job descriptions can make or break a diversity recruitment process. It is important to use language that is not gendered, ageist, ableist, or otherwise discriminatory.

Step 2: Develop a list of relevant, skills-based and job-related questions.

Starting from the skills and experiences that define the role, develop a list of questions that give each candidate an opportunity to share those qualities to the extent they have them. While it may be appropriate to include teacher-specific language and scenarios when interviewing candidates with prior teaching experience, or being hired into a specific role like Guidance Counselor, aim to create questions that use straightforward language with minimal educational jargon. This is especially true for interviews with new teachers and/or support staff roles.

Structured interviewing predominantly uses two types of questions: Behavioral ("Tell me about a time your behavior had a positive impact on your team") and Situational ("How would you communicate with a parent or guardian who isn't happy with their child's experience in your classroom?"). Behavioral questions are good at revealing patterns of behavior and situational questions allow you to see how a candidate will respond to position-related situations. Additionally, you may ask general questions to self-assess specific skills or speak to work-related preferences.

Step 3: Develop a rubric with standardized evaluation criteria.

Creating a rubric for the interview gives your team the chance to explicitly align the skills they are asking about with the manner they are scored. Once built, the rubric also serves as a checklist for ensuring consistency between interviews and providing a standard to support the committee's decision for each candidate.

When building a rubric, the hiring committee should return to thinking about the knowledge, skills, and abilities that the candidate will need to be successful in the position. These skills should then be flipped into "look-fors," starting with the qualities that would be present in a high-level response and which indicate the presence of the given abilities in the candidate. Finally, all "look-fors" should be organized according to a scoring system, perhaps with 1-5 levels, that allow a given candidate's response to be compared to a standard and evaluated. An effective scoring system will anticipate possible answers to each interview question and indicate where each will fall in the scoring system.

"My first hire, three years ago, was someone that a few members of the team passed up on, but my principal and myself wanted to bring in for an interview. Since hiring her, she has been a vital part of our community and has formed incredible relationships with our students. She has created clubs and is on her way to being a tenured teacher. Without a diverse hiring committee, she would have fallen through the cracks."

Fact

A teacher of color working in a diverse community of teachers is less likely to feel isolated, frustrated, or fatigued, and less likely to leave the profession than when working alone (Learning Policy Institute, 2018).¹

1. https://learningpolicyinstitute.org/product/diversifyingteaching-profession-report

Step 4: Collaboratively Plan with the Hiring Committee.

Take a moment to develop a plan for the actual interview. This should be a document that frames your overall vision of the hiring process, and includes a script that ties your questions to a set format.

To do this, revisit the vision and "deep why" of inclusive hiring (from Stage 1, Assemble a Diverse Hiring Committee and Stage 2, Examine your Current Practices & Environment) and use it to create a protocol for the interview that provides a streamlined experience for candidates. Start by providing a brief introduction that contextualizes the interview itself within the larger hiring process (as mapped out in Stage 3, Map your Recruitment & Hiring Process), and identify completed stages and any important dates that will follow. When drafting this introduction, consider how committee members will introduce themselves, and include an opportunity for them to explain their background, relationship to the school, and why participating in this process matters to them.

Next, map out the flow of the interview itself. Sequence questions as needed, and make sure there are no redundancies. Determine which committee members will be physically present for the interview and assign speaking roles. Finally, clarify how interview notes will be taken by members in the moment, as well as how and when candidates' performance will be scored and shared among the group afterwards.

The Resume Review Checklist provides an excellent framework for thinking through the roles and responsibilities in this section. Consult it as you plan, taking the pieces that make sense for your school and letting go of any ideas that feel too cumbersome.

Once you have solidified your plan, you are ready to go live with the posting and prepare to interview!

Tips to Mitigate Bias

DO: Assess candidates based on standardized criteria and scoring guides developed by the hiring committee.

AVOID: Making a decision about interviewed candidates based on a "gut" feeling.

Quick look:

What is the purpose of this stage?

Implement the structured interview process, conduct interviews, and select the best candidates for your school

When should it be used?

- After you have a workflow for accepting resumes
- Before making selections on candidates

Who should be involved at this stage?

Hiring Committee, Principal, Assistant Principal(s)

Starting point

Structured Interviewing Guide

Now that you have outlined a plan for the structured interview process, it's time to put it into action—actively recruiting candidates and carrying out interviews. This is one of the most dynamic phases of the hiring process, where written plans take a back seat to live interaction. It is therefore even more important to approach it with care, building in structures to prevent bias, yet allowing your community to shine in an authentic manner that shows your commitment to inclusivity.

In this stage you will:

- ☐ Implement an inclusive advertising and outreach plan to source diverse (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.) candidates
- ☐ Get tips and advice on executing the structured interviewing process planned in Stage 4

Posting and Advertising the Role

The recruitment process begins with advertising your job posting and planning additional outreach to hit the widest possible candidate pool. No matter how inclusive and well-crafted your job description may be, if a diverse (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.) audience does not see the posting, your recruitment pool will be limited. Below are several recommendations for maximizing the effectiveness of your advertising and outreach:

- Post a position internally and externally with a wide variety of diverse stakeholder groups to avoid replicating any gaps within your team.
 - If your budget has been released, add the position to your Table of Organization in Galaxy so it is visible in the Open Market Transfer System for current DOE staff to view.
 - Post the position in the New Teacher Finder with details about the role and your school so it is visible to external teacher candidates. Make sure to include an end date and make the post visible to candidates. You can add a secondary point of contact on your hiring committee and update your post at any time.
 - Share the position through school-based social media, and with the school community to reach the broadest audience.
 - Note: all external teacher candidates must submit an application through TeachNYC.net to be processed through Applicant Gateway.
- Increase awareness about training programs and tuition reimbursement available for school-based roles through DOE hiring fairs and related events.
- Create opportunities for candidates to visit your school and experience your community. These can range from formal school tours and open school days with meal breaks and student speakers, to more informal invitations to see the school in action, offering candidates the opportunity to speak with current staff without administration present.

- Collect and analyze applicant flow data from the recruitment sources that you used to assess their effectiveness.
- Develop strategic partnerships with a varied range of colleges, trade schools, apprentice programs, and affinity organizations to work more collaboratively around recruiting diverse top talent.

Reviewing Candidates

As candidates respond to job postings with applications and resumes, it is time to put your hiring committee's plans into action. The systems you have developed up until this point will bear fruit, streamlining a candidate's experience and putting your school's best foot forward. As lead of your school's hiring process, use this time to informally check-in on the various processes in motion, reminding task owners of their responsibilities. As interviews get booked, double check the reserved times and ensure they still fit with everyone's calendar. Communicate any changes to the staff doing the interviews.

Interview Candidates

The interviewing phase can feel like one of the most exciting parts of the hiring and recruitment process. However, being alert to potential biases against candidates takes on added importance as the process itself speeds up and becomes more interactive.

Throughout the interview process, the committee members should continue to be aware of affinity bias, confirmation bias, halo effect, and conformity bias as defined in Stage 2: Examine your Current Practices & Environment. Remember that bias can show up before, during, and after the interview.

During the interview, interviewers should take detailed notes that relate to the knowledge, skills, and abilities needed for the job role. The notes should not contain subjective information concerning the evaluator's opinion about the candidate being interviewed. The evaluator should capture the factual details of what the candidate said or accomplished. Avoid making notes about the candidate's appearance, identity, or membership in a protected class.

Self-Reflection Questions While Evaluating a Candidate's Interview Performance

- How was my evaluation informed by my own cultural and lived experiences?
- What ways might I be interpreting a candidate's skills due to my own socialization and culture?
- Was there anything I was drawn to that is not a named skill? Why might that be?
- What might I be missing from the interviewing process?

Fact

Teachers of color boost the academic performance of students of color, including improved reading and math test scores (Learning Policy Institute, 2018).¹

Stay Insistent About Being Consistent

Always adhere to set standards and rubrics when weighing each candidate to ensure that justification of hiring decisions are done in an equitable manner. Once standards are set they should not change after interviewing begins.

Create an Inclusive Hiring Environment

At every stage, hiring is a mutual process. Candidates are of course hoping to impress you and secure a job, but equally, you must try to impress them, showcasing your community and sharing why it would make a good home. This mutuality is never more important than during the interview itself. Consider the following tips to create an inclusive hiring environment:

- For in-person interviews, be aware of accessibility to and within the building where the interview is taking place. Does the entrance have steps? Is there a ramp? Is there an elevator?
- ▶ For online and phone interviews, ensure that the interviewers are in settings where the interviewers are visible and easy to hear.
- Respect the applicant's time and personal setting

 do not change the interview at the last minute, as the person may have arranged a quiet setting or obtained childcare to make the interview.

- Communicate a willingness to help with accessibility, by including a general statement in outreach to all candidates offering to help with accommodations if needed (i.e., "To request an accommodation, please contact...")
- Assess if the building where the interview is taking place has all-gender / gender inclusive restrooms and notify the interviewee of these (e.g., there is a men's and women's restroom on this floor, and on the 2nd floor there is an all gender bathroom).
- If the interview involves various groups of interviewers, allow for breaks during the day or offer to split the day to create moments of decompression.

Recommendations for Post-Interview Discussion

After the interview, your team should meet to share notes and discuss the candidate as soon as possible. Move your way through the interview protocol and corresponding rubric, and evaluate the candidate's responses against each of your criteria. With your eye on inclusivity, pay particular attention to how the candidate has demonstrated the ability to work with diverse (i.e., race, culture/ethnicity, gender identity, disability, sexual orientation, etc.) populations and can develop and maintain working relationships with diverse coworkers, community members, and the populations we serve. As you engage in discussion, and return to your predetermined decision making process, it is important to remind the team to analyze the "why" behind their decisions and feelings.

Even the Best Teams...

Given the pervasiveness of unconscious bias, it is not unusual for inappropriate or biased statements to come up during post-interview discussions. Consider establishing discussion norms that remind participants of this possibility, and provide pre-established responses that recognize and illuminate wrongful statements in the moment. The more work done in advance, the less these moments will feel fraught or personal, and the more they can transform into powerful learning moments for everyone.

Finally, if you get stuck, consider the following questions to help you move forward:

- What are the minimal qualifications of a candidate that you would move on to the next stage?
- How many applications will be moved on to the next round? Why this number for your school?
- How will you know if the application review was successful?

STAGE 6 | Engage & Onboard New Hires

What is the purpose of this stage?

Welcome new teachers into your school and prepare them to be active members of your community in support of strengthening retention

When should it be used?

- After selecting and notifying a candidate
- Before the first day of classes
- Ongoing throughout the year

Who should be involved at this stage?

All school staff, students, families, and caregivers

"When I was hired at my current school, I was hesitant to go to the interview due to the unfamiliarity of the area. Once in the building, the culture of the school eased my worry. I was received warmly by the staff, students, and families. I would now like to extend that warmth and friendliness to newcomers and make everyone feel welcomed to the community."

—NYC Peer Recruiter

When it comes to building an inclusive culture, the old truisms about a first impression cannot be overstated. You will never get a second chance to welcome a new staff member into your school community. Onboarding represents your first and most important opportunity to prove your inclusive culture is authentic, a place where every staff member feels emotionally safe and able to bring their whole self into your building. It is the fundamental building block of a school culture that supports ongoing professional growth.

In Stage 6 you will:

- □ Plan activities and events to introduce new staff to your school community
- Organize your onboarding process to make sure every hire knows what is expected and where they can go for help, allowing them to focus on the work ahead of them
- ☐ Get tips and advice for making new hires feel safe, welcome, and ready to share themselves with your community

Onboarding

Mentoring

Professional Growth and Development

Development and Support

Implementing inclusive onboarding and mentoring structures are the first two steps to establishing a school culture that supports ongoing professional growth. Failure here can be catastrophic: strong candidates know their worth, and will walk away from offers that do not live up to the promises of the interview. But even the smaller missed opportunities take their toll, resulting in lower investment, lower satisfaction, and lower retention. Hiring does not end with an acceptance letter, and true inclusivity only begins the moment someone walks through your door.

Think Holistically to Welcome New Teachers

Consider all the places a new hire needs to be grounded in to feel stable—from professional development to prepare them for the work at hand to their social-emotional needs so they can bring their full self to your community. After interviewing new teachers and skilled principals alike, we identified five core areas needed to support new hires. Below we offer guiding questions for reflecting on those five areas as well as concrete advice for implementing them. We hope you can use the items to identify gaps

Promoting Equity

New York City continues to make progress in diversifying our teaching force, which research shows has a direct positive impact on our students. Essential to this continued progress is the support our new and diverse (e.g. race, language, gender, sexual orientation, disability, socioeconomic status, etc) teachers receive, especially our teachers of color. Schools must implement professional development programming and support structures that respond to the unique challenges teachers of color face, cultivate more equitable and inclusive environments, and honor their strengths as educators. From microaggressions to lack of leadership pathways, many teachers of color experience an invisible tax on their participation in the school communitywhich can quickly become a reason to exit the profession. Thoughtful planning for new teacher onboarding can provide the equitable support needed to retain teachers at your school.

and create a comprehensive onboarding program that works for you.

Finally, we cannot stress the basics enough: newly hired employees will only fully engage if they can access pay systems and the HR-related benefits they were promised. Resolving issues related to teachers' salary, benefits, and other HR-related matters is the first step in setting your teachers up for success.

- ☐ Host PD on personalizing instructional materials for your school:
 - ☐ On building bridges with your students, families, and caretakers
 - On your instructional model, with an emphasis on getting staff to share lesson planning tips and collaboratively unpacking assessment design
 - On reviewing student work, to help weave the new hire into the community and reinforce expectations for student communication
 - On other strategies that are specific and relevant to your school environment
- □ Offer opportunities for the new hire to view experienced instruction:
 - ☐ Support intervisitation by building a temporary staggered schedule for release time so the new hire can observe their mentor and other teachers' classrooms and receive intervisits
 - If a staggered schedule is not possible, coordinate planning periods to allow for intervisitation
 - □ Access the Collaborative Learning Through Peer Inter-visitations Toolkit for researchbased strategies and templates to support implementation
- □ Schedule instructional goal setting meetings with new teachers and follow up with purely descriptive non-judgmental observations:
 - □ Pending consent of the new teacher, include their mentor in debrief conversations and follow-up

- □ Allow teachers time to take school- or centralhosted professional development training offered before, during and/or after school.
- ☐ Get creative! Consider scheduling Zoom calls facilitated by master teachers in topics such as lesson ideas, self-care and classroom management strategies.

Survey Says

The NYC DOE New Teacher Survey shows that teachers are seeking more support in assessment building and effective communication with students, families, and caregivers.

Resources for Professional Development Responsive to the Needs of Diverse Teachers:

- ▶ The Center for Black Educator Development provides academies, workshops, and resources to support equity in the recruiting, training, hiring, and retention of Black educators.
- Learning for Justice offers classroom resources and professional opportunities that support dismantling bias and strengthen intersectional movements. Their work focuses on the following: Culture and Climate, Curriculum and Instruction, Leadership, and Family and Community Engagement.

Support Pedagogical Growth: Students in Special Populations (SwD/MLL)

Goal: Ensure responsive, quality instruction for all learners by connecting new hires to PD opportunities and support structures

Who Should Be Involved: Principal, Assistant Principal(s), Grade/Subject Team Leaders and other teacher leaders, IEP coordinator

Guiding Questions:

- Have I connected new hires with teacher leaders and provided resources to support responsive instruction for multilingual learners and students with IEPs?
- Have I supported the SwD in creating and implementing a support plan for new hires, including PD sessions on the IEP process?
- Have I provided new hires with strategies and processes for effective communication with families and caregivers?

"The IEP process for our school was not explained, which left me confused and piled with work."

-New Teacher Testimonial

Ways to Implement:

■ Meet with your SwD coordinator and cocreate a support plan for making sure new hires understand their schedule, discipline procedures, IEP calendars, and any legal or mandated requirements for instruction and family communication.

- □ Host PD on conducting IEP meetings, writing IEPS, and applying their requirements to classroom instruction.
- ☐ Connect new hires to SESIS training.
- ☐ Ensure new teachers know where and how to sign up for PDs, and how to find help with writing IEPs.
- ☐ Share what your school does to support SwD and MLL students at large, and where to find curriculum support.
- □ Provide new hires with guidance for effective communication with student families and caregivers.
- □ Provide a process for teachers to follow in the event they need an interpreter for a parent conference.
- □ Ask teacher leaders to walk new hires through Instructional support resources for teachers of multilingual learners and students with IEPs, such as the Multilingual Learners Infohub page and Special Education Infohub page.
- □ Encourage new hires to register for webinars that support differentiating instruction for diverse student needs, such as offerings from the Special Education Office's Professional Learning page.
- □ Plan structures to support classroom intervisitation among new hires, model teachers, and mentors to support differentiated instructional delivery, implementing accommodations and modifications, and classroom management strategies.
- ☐ Check in with mentors and mentees to discuss professional goals and monitor their progress.

Goal: All new (first year) teachers are required to receive mentoring. Use the City's mentoring program as a jumping off point to inclusively bring new teachers into your community, considering their intersectional identities to build trust and understanding when assigning mentors

Who Should Be Involved: Principal, New Teacher Induction Committee, Mentors, Teachers

Guiding Questions:

- Have I assigned an in-building mentor to all new teachers?
- Have I established and engaged my New Teacher Induction Committee (NTIC) regarding mentor selection?
- What structures am I putting in place to support a fruitful mentoring relationship?
 - Am I building teaching schedules to facilitate mentor meetings?
 - Am I budgeting money for participants to support the additional time this takes?
 - Am I matching new teachers and potential mentors around qualities they believe would support a strong partnership?
- Have I gotten input from new teachers on what they think makes a strong match, including the full range of identity and commonalities such as shared interests, identity markers like age, race, gender, and culture, and professional qualities like experience and the subject/grade level being taught?
- Has the NTIC responded to new teacher input when advising mentor matches?
- What type of curriculum am I giving my mentors? Have I shared the expectation that mentors become certified in Mentoring for Equity through the DOE's Citywide Mentoring certification course?

Guiding Questions, Continued:

- What expectations around classroom visits, modeling, co-teaching, debriefs, and assessment review am I giving?
- How am I getting feedback on whether this is a successful pairing? What recourse do my mentees have if the mentor I assigned is not supporting their needs?
- While maintaining mentor-mentee confidentiality, how am I engaging both the mentee and mentor to ensure alignment of expectations?

"Having a mentor is very important...

They provide everything from physical support in helping to arrange the classroom to guidance grounded in their own experiences."

-New Teacher Testimonial

- ☐ Form a New Teacher Induction Committee (NTIC)—comprised of the UFT chapter leader, teachers and other community members, such as instructional support staff, students, and caregivers—and engage the NTIC to create a new teacher mentoring plan for first year teachers.
- ☐ Push the NTIC to consider the following when selecting mentors:
 - □ Capacity to engage mentees in conversations that focus on culturally responsive and sustainable practices
 - □ Ability to support routines that are inclusive of marginalized identities, such as race, gender, home language, and neurodivergence

Ш	Possess	content	expertise	that is	related	to	the roles of r	nentees

- □ Require certification in Mentoring for Equity and support completion.
- □ Ensure all mentors have a pacing calendar for the school year to support mentee's instruction, including opportunities for mentee and mentors to connect well before the first day of classes.
- □ Prompt mentors to share instructional resources, such as department resource drives, curriculum maps, textbooks, lesson planning resources, and assessment guidelines.
- □ Jumpstart the relationship by providing a list of potential support offerings that can be customized according to needs identified by the mentor and mentee. Consider the following examples when creating your list:
 - Mentor greets mentee during the first period of their first day to assist with attendance
 - Mentor models instruction and offers to coteach a class as a next step
 - Mentor opens their classroom to the mentee, and/or connects them to other teachers
- □ Build a structure for mentees to offer feedback about mentoring, including options to be partnered with a new mentor if their needs are not being met.
- ☐ Plan low-stakes group check-in meetings with administrators and new hires to strengthen connections and build trust.
- Mentors are an excellent support group but should not be the sole person a new teacher relies on. If the new teacher was hired through a non-traditional pathway, remind them of opportunities to seek additional support through their alternative certification program.

Inclusion through Mentorship

When pairing mentors with mentees, considering intersectional identity is a key step to cultivating an inclusive, welcoming environment. Go beyond subject area and grade to consider how characteristics such as age, culture, race, and recency to the profession can bond people. Ask for input from mentees about what qualities and points of connection can support a fruitful mentoring relationship.

Goal: Help new hires feel at home in a new environment

Who Should Be Involved: School staff, students, families, and caregivers

Guiding Questions:

- How am I involving students in onboarding to help welcome new teachers?
- How am I providing opportunities for teachers to engage with the community?
- How am I teaching new hires about our community values? How am I building a school culture that embodies these values?

"As educators, we understand the value of a growth mindset, and should understand that adults—just like our students—flourish when we are encouraged to build on who we are and feel valued as unique individuals."

-New Teacher Testimonial

- ☐ Build ice breakers into professional learning events and team meetings to help new staff get to know each other and their community.
- ☐ Hold school-based welcome events such as:
 - ☐ A "Welcome Back BBQ" to build interpersonal relationships
 - ☐ A tour of the neighborhood. This is a great chance to have students join the onboarding

- process. Allow student tour guides to show off their neighborhood, including lunch spots, train access points, parks, and community highlights.
- ☐ A scavenger hunt to interact with local businesses
- ☐ A "speed networking" event at a staff meeting for new hires to ask questions
- ☐ Give an overview of your school, sharing your mission, goals, demographic data and support services. This should include expectations for professional development, teacher teams, teaching observation processes, and evaluation.
- □ Invite teachers to tour the school and visit classrooms, then set up a structured debrief of their visits to underscore key routines and community expectations.
- ☐ Create a "Community Guide"—built by the NTIC, students, and families—that offers:
 - ☐ A list of restaurants for lunch with directions
 - ☐ Building protocols for arrival/lunch/dismissal
 - ☐ "First week" tips and testimonials from students and teachers
 - A sample daily routine
- □ Conduct a neighborhood walk-through with new hires.

Care for Social-emotional Well-being

Goal: Create structures and spaces to humanize the teaching experience

Who Should Be Involved: Principal, NTIC, Mentors, New Teachers, Students

Guiding Questions:

- Have I reserved time for teachers to set up their classroom and independently plan? How can mentors support classroom setup?
- How am I providing opportunities for mentors to check-in with mentees and build personal connections?
- How am I creating an environment that feels safe and welcoming for all identities and experience levels?
 - Are there opportunities for authentic sharing and storytelling? How can I open space for my experienced staff to share "first-year" stories with new hires?
 - Are there opportunities for connecting with affinity groups?

"I wish I would receive information letting me know when I do something good outside of an observation. I work really hard to go above and beyond but that doesn't seem to matter to anyone."

-New Teacher Testimonial

Administer your own school-specific new teacher survey to assess the needs and wants of new teachers.
1 Check in with new teachers in-person and create a welcoming environment for them to share their thoughts and feelings.
1 Create opportunities for teachers to share stories about their first year, be vulnerable about their practice, and create bonds, consider:
☐ Encourage teachers to invite new hires for to sit with them for lunch, potentially structuring a "buddy" system
Create an environment where it is safe to fail occasionally and mistakes are an opportunity for learning—because everyone at your school understands that perfection is impossible.
Uplift the successes of new teachers, offering positive feedback outside of formal observations.
Connect services for student social-emotional wellbeing to the staff, such as mindfulness moments or group yoga.
Offer affinity spaces, or provide access to affinity spaces outside of the school, such as NYC Men Teach, for teachers to share their experiences with affinity groups.
1 Keep email communications to a minimum as teachers are receiving emails from both their school and central offices.
Dedicate time for setting up the classroom:
■ Make sure additional activities like social hours or PD do not overwhelm the teacher, but are supports around the core work of establishing their own classroom and instructional style
☐ Consider housing a shared resource bank with classroom supplies
☐ Instruct mentors and/or NTIC members to thought partner with new teachers about how the classroom set up supports student learning

Goal: Provide responsive support and an inclusive environment to all new hires regardless of their start date

Who Should Be Involved: Principal, Assistant Principal(s), NTIC, Mentors, New Teachers, Students, Grade/Subject Team Leaders and other teacher leaders, IEP coordinator

Guiding Questions:

- Have I shared curriculum guidance and model lesson plans to support a smooth transition into the role?
- Have I connected the new hire(s) with their subject/grade level teams?
- Have I consulted the NTIC to match the new hire with a mentor?
- Have I dedicated time for the new hire to connect with administrators and teachers?
- Have I dedicated time for classroom setup?

"Since I started midway through the year, I felt as though I was not given the support to fully comprehend the scope of my role. I also did not receive support or instruction on all the technology we need, such as access to different websites and tools, and how to sign up for the union."

---New Teacher Testimonial

Template C Sample Onboarding Timeline, Continued

First week of teaching

- ☐ Provide mentors with a suggested schedule of touchpoints, but remind them to align them with their mentee's needs. Suggested touchpoints could include:
 - 1st period of 1st day teaching
 - After last bell on their 1st day teaching
 - One lunch period
 - End of first week
 - One planning period
- ☐ Remind mentors to utilize tools from mentoring certification to support conversations
- ☐ Check-in with new hires to ensure they can access all instructional materials, including resource drives and templates
- ☐ Create a clear time for check-ins to avoid surprise observations
- Ask student volunteers to greet teachers at school entrances during arrival and dismissal

First month of teaching

- ☐ Ensure instructional support meetings are taking place with all new teachers to set meaningful goals and address needs
- ☐ Informally observe classroom instruction of all new teachers
- ☐ Debrief observations with teachers in a timely manner and provide constructive feedback

Ongoing

- ☐ Schedule monthly check-in meetings with mentors and mentees to ask for feedback on program, e.g.:
 - ▶ To all: Are you finding sufficient time to connect? How can I support you?
 - To mentors: What professional goals are you working on with your mentee?
 - > To mentors: What might I look for in your mentee's classroom to support these goals?
 - ▶ To mentees: What professional goals are you working on? Do you feel empowered to make progress, or do you need additional support?
- ☐ Collect survey or in-person feedback from mentees about mentorship program
- ☐ Respond to feedback from mentees, reassigning mentors if needed
- ☐ Intentionally balance meeting time and planning time
- ☐ Consider bandwidth of new teachers and mentors
- ☐ Allocate budget for mentors and New Teacher Induction Committee where possible
- ☐ Recognize student ambassadors and volunteers for their leadership
- ☐ Consider ways to support reciprocal teaching from mentee to mentor
 - E.g., you may notice a new teacher using technology in a robust way or trying an effective engagement strategy. Uplift these successes and provide opportunities for new teachers to share their skills.
- Plan how to sustain mentor relationships beyond the first year of teaching

Template D New Teacher Welcome Letter

Good morning new teachers,

On behalf of the [insert school name] community, welcome and congratulations on your new role! We look forward to working together to provide the best possible environment for students and staff alike. Over the next few weeks, you will receive communications about HR-related procedures, district-sponsored orientation, and school-building professional development opportunities. Knowing that all this information can become overwhelming, please reference the checklist below as you begin onboarding. Many of the items require a DOE login. Please reach out to me, Principal [insert name] at [insert email address], if you need support accessing your DOE email or credentials.

- 1. Register for DOE New Teacher Week by [____].
- 2. Review the Human Resource Roadmap. The HR Roadmap is a step-by-step guide to all HR items and steps you will need to complete as a new DOE employee. Ensure you review the guidance on this page and ask any related questions early in your onboarding process.
- 3. Submit Your Vaccination Information. As of September 12, 2021, all DOE staff are required to provide proof of COVID-19 vaccination. You must submit proof of vaccination using the NYC DOE's Vaccination Portal.
 - For more information and updates, visit the COVID-19 Vaccination Portal page on the NYC DOE Info Hub.
 - For more information about where to get vaccinated, visit vaccinefinder.nyc.gov or call 877-VAX-4-NYC.
 - For more information on where to get tested, visit https://www.nychealthandhospitals.org/covid-19-testing-sites/.
- 4. Schedule a 1:1 check-in meeting with our payroll secretary. [Insert name, contact information, and guidance for scheduling their first meeting]
- 5. Attend school building orientation. [Insert details on dates, times, and focus area of any school-specific training and orientation events]
- 6. Look for email communication about mentoring and follow included steps. If you are a first year teacher, expect to be assigned an in-building mentor that will support your professional development and induction into our community over the next year. [Add school-specific information relevant to your mentorship plan]
- 7. Set up your classroom. [Add guidance about when and how teachers can set up their classroom, including ways to connect with the NTIC for support and places in the building they can find extra classroom materials.]
- 8. Join us for our Welcome Back BBQ! [Add details about your school welcome event]

 We are grateful for your commitment to our community and look forward to seeing you in the building soon!

 In partnership,

 Principal ______

[Add relevant school motto and/or mascot]

Template E Onboarding Essentials

Click here to download and customize to your needs*

Note: This table is pre-filled with key steps to address each essential question. After reflecting with your hiring committee about past onboarding practices and potential gaps, edit this table to align with your school's needs.

How are we meeting HR and logistic needs?

- 1. Provide payroll secretary contact info and support scheduling 1:1 meetings
- 2. Update and share employee handbook
- 3. Post building signage and ensure facilities are accessible for all

How are we creating a welcoming, inclusive environment?

- 1. Host a social school welcome event
- Create low-stakes spaces to share "first year" stories
- 3. Host differentiated PD that is responsive to the needs of diverse teachers, and teachers of special populations, such as multilingual learners and students with IEPs

How are we supporting "day one" success?

- Connect new hires with subject/grade level teams to access instructional materials and collaboratively plan
- 2. Ensure teachers register for New Teacher Week
- 3. Dedicate time for classroom set up

How are we laying the foundation for continuous learning?

- 1. Form NTIC and utilize New Teacher Mentoring resources to create a mentorship program
- Understand new hires' professional goals and structure observations, debriefs, and peer intervisitations to support progress
- 3. Connect new hires with external professional learning communities, such as the Center for Black Educator Development and the Institute for Teachers of Color Committed to Racial Justice.
